Inspired by the TED talk by Tim Brown, the purpose of this activity is to help students understand how to create a visual language that describes a brand's emotional message. It will thus encourage them to learn about various principles of design and apply them in a social media strategy.

The lesson begins with a video from the New York Times about the story behind Kinder Surprise Eggs - an activity with potential cultural implications. After watching it, students are asked to develop their own design theory, inspired by the Kinder Surprise Eggs stories, and applied to an imaginary product.
